Introduction: -

The long Indian freedom struggle eventually conducted to India's Independence on August 15, 1947. The Independence was achieved by paying a big price for it. The Indian subcontinent was separated into parts India and Pakistan notable to universal violence and massacre. One of the gravest events in the Indian history is the partition of India. It is hard to detect so any such events with such magnitude and extensive rational in the history of the world. Statistically 1 million people were killed and over 10 million people were displaced. However, these figures fail to tell even a part of the outrage of the partition tragedy. These statistics also flop because it doesn't give us the slightest of ideas as to how females must have sensed while drowning themselves in wells in order to stay away from kidnapped by men of the other community. These figures also fail as it couldn't to show reality. It was neither the religion nor the politics but sheer out of the feeling of hesitancy which made most of the people choose India for Pakistan. The historical narrative also fails as it couldn't narrated the pain of separation from their near and dear ones.

On 14 August 1947 India was partitioned into India and Pakistan then after in 1971 a third country, Bangladesh, was additionally created out. The 1940s have an important place in the history of the Indian Subcontinent because this was the time when the idea of the Two Nations Theory was introduced.

Two Nations Theory: -

Two Nations Theory was a political ideology that explains the causes for dividing India into two nations, India and Pakistan on religious basis. It was first introduced by Muhammad Ali Jinnah in the 1940s at the end of British rule in India. The policy has its roots in the separate electorate system that was introduced in phases for the Muslims and Hindus under the constitutional reforms of 1909, 1919, and 1935. In this system Muslims could elect their own candidate to represent them in the provincial Legislative council and legislative assemblies, in the Muslim majority areas of India.

It was planned to this system Muslim formed their Ministries in Bengal and in the North western province. This gave an opportunity to some of the Muslims to turn this into a separate nation there emerged the Two Nations Theory emphasizing that Muslims are a single nation historically, culturally, intellectually and socially. The theory was first propounded by sir Syed Ahmed Khan. Later Allama Iqbal, poet and philosopher, favored it. Mohammad Ali Jinnah advocated it very strongly Mohammad Ali Jinnah in his presidential address at Lahore on March 1940 explained the Two Nations Theory and why it is needed. It is extremely difficult to appreciate why Hindu people's failure to understand the real nature of Islam and Hinduism. They are not religions in the strict feelings of the word, but are in fact different and distinct social orders. It is a fantasy that the Hindus and Muslims can ever evolve a common nationality. This was misconception of one India nation. It has troubles and will lead India to destruction if we fail to revise our nation in time.

The Hindu and Muslims belong to two separate traditional, religious philosophies, social and literatures. They never intermarry, interdine together and indeed with each other. The Hindu and Muslim are belong to two different civilization. They are based mainly on opposite ideas and conceptions. Their view of life is different.

The various genres in the Indian English Fiction deals with the partition and politics of partition at great span some of the most recognized work of fiction dealing with the themes of partition are as follows: -

Raja Rao's "Kantapura" (1938), Khawaja Ahmed Abbas's "Inquilab" (1955), R.K.

Narayan's "Waiting for Mahatma" (1955), Kamala Markanday's "Some Inner Fury" (1956), Kushwant Singh's "Train to Pakistan" (1956), Attia Hossain's "Sunlight on a Broken column" (1961), Bal Chandra Rajan's "The Dark Dancer" (1959), Manohar Malegaon Ker's "A Bend in the Ganges" (1965), BhishmaSahanis "Tamas" (1973), Raj Gill's "The Rape" (1974), Chaman Nahal's "Azadi" (1975), H.G Gill's "Ashes and Petals" (1979), Salman Rushdie's Midnight Children (1980), BapsiSidwa's Ice- candy (1988), Amitav Ghosh's The shadow line (1988), Kesavan's locking Through Glass (1995), Manja Kapoor's Difficult Daughter (1998), Shauna Singh Baldwin's What the Body Remember (1999) .

Here I selected for the study Khushwant Singh's the novel 'Train to Pakistan' is place in a fictional village called Mano Majra which is located on the borders of yet to be born India and Pakistan. For centuries it has been a village where divers group members coincide quite fully. The novel is separated into four sections 1) Ducioty 2) Kalyuga 3) Mano Majra 4) Karma. Each section of the novel is clue regarding the imminent event of collective tension and brutality in Mano Majra. It is the time when India is separated on the line of religion. Midway the stress elsewhere, the village uninterrupted to be calm until one fateful night when a train overflowing dead bodies come in the village. After this it flattered difficult for the villagers to interact with their companion of Muslim villagers. They had decided that Muslims should quit the village. Muslims at first think that soon they will go back to their village and restart their usual life.

"Uncle said lambardar in a heavy voice it is very hard for me to say but seeing the sort of time we live in I would advise you to go to the refugee camp while this trouble is on. you lock after your houses with your belongings. We will look after your cattle till you come back". (Train To Pakistan,134p)

"Later, it is revealed to them that they are going to be deported to the new country that is Pakistan. The new that the Mano Majra Muslims were going to Pakistan. The new came as a surprise. The lambardar had believed they would only go to the refugee camp for a few days them return". (Train To Pakistan,142p)

The next section of the novel Kalyuga reveals the dreadful killings that were taking place in the name of religion at the time of partition. People are wander from Indian to Pakistan and inversely. Jaggu's love, Nooran is also quite the village by that train. Nooran is pregnant with Jaggu's child. She appeals Jaggu's mother to accept her as her daughter- in- law as she conveys the baby of a sheikh man and if Muslim's approach to know this truth, they would kill her and the child. Jaggu's mother endure insensitive. Jaggu came to know about the intrigue and surrender his life to save the love of his life Nooran. The whole novel handover the terrifying details on the trauma of partition using the fictional village life.

CONCLUSION: -

Train to Pakistan, novel represents varied narratives of the same import of India's history. It is referred to real occurrence of train of dead bodies reported in newspapers. It related history of fiction- out of this single terrible fact the writer made an entire set of intertwist lives which are menace by the communal violence. In the end it shows the sympathetic side of human nature through Nooran and Jaggu. Jaggu sacrificed his life for the woman who is carrying his child in her womb though he was unmindful of it.

In this method all the writing present diverse point of view. In other words, political, social and historical movements. It gives rise to a new form of writing with new characters. It related to the history of the times in various ways. It is based beyond their cast, class and gender. The views of the world are affected by the present day of history. The social political changes that take place as a result. The novelty of to themes as well as the novelty of forms. It is the result of these turbulence. Here we have considered the partition of India as one such turbulence. It tried to see how varied author form different locations have donated to the conversation of bearing and loathing enhance by love and Sacrifice.
